

UMI® Dissertations

Each publisher or editorial board of each scholarly or peer-reviewed journal sets its own policy as to whether or not publication of a dissertation or thesis in the form in which it is submitted to ProQuest or an institutional repository (i.e. – the work for which the author was granted his or her degree) constitutes a prior publication that disqualifies the author from submitting a journal article or monograph on the same subject matter for publication.

ProQuest has been publishing dissertations and theses since 1939, and our experience is that the majority of publishers do not find the publication of a dissertation or thesis problematic. For example, Elsevier has an explicit exemption for publication through ProQuest's UMI® publishing program.

For authors concerned with the “prior publication” issue, ProQuest has developed a number of mechanisms to assist in alleviating this concern. For example, an author may chose to have a full sales restriction on the sale of copies of their manuscript but nonetheless allow ProQuest to preserve their manuscript in microfilm and electronic form and to further include the citation and abstract information in the ProQuest Dissertation and Theses Database (PQDT). The sales restriction may allow for sales of the manuscript only after a designated period of time (an embargo) or may be in place indefinitely until the author rescinds the restriction (full restriction). If the concern arises after submission of the dissertation or thesis to ProQuest, we are also able to apply these types of restrictions prospectively upon request of the author.
